

ADDITIONAL FROM EUROPE.

THE RECOGNITION QUESTION

Mexico to Recognize the Rebels and Napoleon to Follow.

A NEW REBEL ENVOY TO FRANCE.

Gillmore's "Marsh Angel"
Heard in England.

C. L. HECKER TO KARL BLIND.

The German Confederation—Its Organization,
Resources and Rules.

French Opinion on the Naval Rights of Belligerents.

&c. &c. &c.

Our European files are dated in London and Paris to the 12th of September. The journals contain the following very interesting matter in addition to the important compilation published in the Herald yesterday morning.

THE AMERICAN REBELLION.

The Alleged Alliance of Russia and the United States.

(Translated for the New York HERALD from the Paris Papers, Sept. 2.)

Among the numerous reports which have been put into circulation within the last few days we observed one referring to a treaty between the United States and the United Kingdom.

It is necessary to observe in the first place that the journals which have added to circulate this report have only done so as a matter of rumor, having no serious foundation. The American reader will perceive that such a report has been produced in respect of their own country.

At the same time we admit, if necessary, that the idea of such a treaty has been conceived.

That of the two powers it will serve. What practical application can it have? It is evident that the United States, in order to break up the rebellion, must either go to war with the United Kingdom, or, if they do not, then to the assistance of their allies.

What is the result of such a course?

We thus see at a glance that there is nothing to indicate the existence of the treaty spoken of, or even that the states have dreamed of it; but though such a document were really signed, it could never be of any practical value.

Private Property at Sea—Why France
Should Tax the Blockade.

(Translated from the Journal du Commerce, Sept. 4, for the NEW YORK HERALD.)

The deputations committed by two or three Confederate corsairs, not only on federal vessels, but on neutral ships, have been a source of much trouble to the blockade and the appearance of one of these corsairs (the Florida) in the harbor of Brest, to repair the injuries suffered by her machinery, and to dispose of the officers and sailors of vessels which she had captured at sea, call for the attention of the states.

On the 1st of August the United States sent a decree to all our ports and England, to prohibit a vessel from leaving port without a permit to declare war. If Russia had any hope of doing so would she consent to dismantele Crozat and other ports and harbors of the Atlantic coast?

We thus see at a glance that there is nothing to indicate the existence of the treaty spoken of, or even that the states have dreamed of it; but though such a document were really signed, it could never be of any practical value.

The Marsh Angel Near Charles-

[From the London Telegraph, Sept. 5.]

"The Marsh Angel," as the rebels call the big gun of General Gillmore, has surely behaved like a mad bull in the ring to wake up all of our critics at home and abroad. He has not only won over all of them, but has also won over the American struggle throughout as if he had been a hand and a corner of his dozen politicians, a hand of a dozen politicians, and a hand of a dozen neutrals.

At the same time we admit, if necessary, that the idea of such a treaty has been conceived.

That of the two powers it will serve. What practical application can it have? It is evident that the United States, in order to break up the rebellion, must either go to war with the United Kingdom, or, if they do not, then to the assistance of their allies.

What is the result of such a course?

We thus see at a glance that there is nothing to indicate the existence of the treaty spoken of, or even that the states have dreamed of it; but though such a document were really signed, it could never be of any practical value.

Private Property at Sea—Why France
Should Tax the Blockade.

(Translated from the Journal du Commerce, Sept. 4, for the NEW YORK HERALD.)

The deputations committed by two or three Confederate corsairs, not only on federal vessels, but on neutral ships, have been a source of much trouble to the blockade and the appearance of one of these corsairs (the Florida) in the harbor of Brest, to repair the injuries suffered by her machinery, and to dispose of the officers and sailors of vessels which she had captured at sea, call for the attention of the states.

On the 1st of August the United States sent a decree to all our ports and England, to prohibit a vessel from leaving port without a permit to declare war. If Russia had any hope of doing so would she consent to dismantele Crozat and other ports and harbors of the Atlantic coast?

We thus see at a glance that there is nothing to indicate the existence of the treaty spoken of, or even that the states have dreamed of it; but though such a document were really signed, it could never be of any practical value.

The Marsh Angel Near Charles-

[From the London Telegraph, Sept. 5.]

"The Marsh Angel," as the rebels call the big gun of General Gillmore, has surely behaved like a mad bull in the ring to wake up all of our critics at home and abroad. He has not only won over all of them, but has also won over the American struggle throughout as if he had been a hand and a corner of his dozen politicians, a hand of a dozen neutrals.

At the same time we admit, if necessary, that the idea of such a treaty has been conceived.

That of the two powers it will serve. What practical application can it have? It is evident that the United States, in order to break up the rebellion, must either go to war with the United Kingdom, or, if they do not, then to the assistance of their allies.

What is the result of such a course?

We thus see at a glance that there is nothing to indicate the existence of the treaty spoken of, or even that the states have dreamed of it; but though such a document were really signed, it could never be of any practical value.

The Marsh Angel Near Charles-

[From the London Telegraph, Sept. 5.]

"The Marsh Angel," as the rebels call the big gun of General Gillmore, has surely behaved like a mad bull in the ring to wake up all of our critics at home and abroad. He has not only won over all of them, but has also won over the American struggle throughout as if he had been a hand and a corner of his dozen politicians, a hand of a dozen neutrals.

At the same time we admit, if necessary, that the idea of such a treaty has been conceived.

That of the two powers it will serve. What practical application can it have? It is evident that the United States, in order to break up the rebellion, must either go to war with the United Kingdom, or, if they do not, then to the assistance of their allies.

What is the result of such a course?

We thus see at a glance that there is nothing to indicate the existence of the treaty spoken of, or even that the states have dreamed of it; but though such a document were really signed, it could never be of any practical value.

The Marsh Angel Near Charles-

[From the London Telegraph, Sept. 5.]

"The Marsh Angel," as the rebels call the big gun of General Gillmore, has surely behaved like a mad bull in the ring to wake up all of our critics at home and abroad. He has not only won over all of them, but has also won over the American struggle throughout as if he had been a hand and a corner of his dozen politicians, a hand of a dozen neutrals.

At the same time we admit, if necessary, that the idea of such a treaty has been conceived.

That of the two powers it will serve. What practical application can it have? It is evident that the United States, in order to break up the rebellion, must either go to war with the United Kingdom, or, if they do not, then to the assistance of their allies.

What is the result of such a course?

We thus see at a glance that there is nothing to indicate the existence of the treaty spoken of, or even that the states have dreamed of it; but though such a document were really signed, it could never be of any practical value.

The Marsh Angel Near Charles-

[From the London Telegraph, Sept. 5.]

"The Marsh Angel," as the rebels call the big gun of General Gillmore, has surely behaved like a mad bull in the ring to wake up all of our critics at home and abroad. He has not only won over all of them, but has also won over the American struggle throughout as if he had been a hand and a corner of his dozen politicians, a hand of a dozen neutrals.

At the same time we admit, if necessary, that the idea of such a treaty has been conceived.

That of the two powers it will serve. What practical application can it have? It is evident that the United States, in order to break up the rebellion, must either go to war with the United Kingdom, or, if they do not, then to the assistance of their allies.

What is the result of such a course?

We thus see at a glance that there is nothing to indicate the existence of the treaty spoken of, or even that the states have dreamed of it; but though such a document were really signed, it could never be of any practical value.

The Marsh Angel Near Charles-

[From the London Telegraph, Sept. 5.]

"The Marsh Angel," as the rebels call the big gun of General Gillmore, has surely behaved like a mad bull in the ring to wake up all of our critics at home and abroad. He has not only won over all of them, but has also won over the American struggle throughout as if he had been a hand and a corner of his dozen politicians, a hand of a dozen neutrals.

At the same time we admit, if necessary, that the idea of such a treaty has been conceived.

That of the two powers it will serve. What practical application can it have? It is evident that the United States, in order to break up the rebellion, must either go to war with the United Kingdom, or, if they do not, then to the assistance of their allies.

What is the result of such a course?

We thus see at a glance that there is nothing to indicate the existence of the treaty spoken of, or even that the states have dreamed of it; but though such a document were really signed, it could never be of any practical value.

The Marsh Angel Near Charles-

[From the London Telegraph, Sept. 5.]

"The Marsh Angel," as the rebels call the big gun of General Gillmore, has surely behaved like a mad bull in the ring to wake up all of our critics at home and abroad. He has not only won over all of them, but has also won over the American struggle throughout as if he had been a hand and a corner of his dozen politicians, a hand of a dozen neutrals.

At the same time we admit, if necessary, that the idea of such a treaty has been conceived.

That of the two powers it will serve. What practical application can it have? It is evident that the United States, in order to break up the rebellion, must either go to war with the United Kingdom, or, if they do not, then to the assistance of their allies.

What is the result of such a course?

We thus see at a glance that there is nothing to indicate the existence of the treaty spoken of, or even that the states have dreamed of it; but though such a document were really signed, it could never be of any practical value.

The Marsh Angel Near Charles-

[From the London Telegraph, Sept. 5.]

"The Marsh Angel," as the rebels call the big gun of General Gillmore, has surely behaved like a mad bull in the ring to wake up all of our critics at home and abroad. He has not only won over all of them, but has also won over the American struggle throughout as if he had been a hand and a corner of his dozen politicians, a hand of a dozen neutrals.

At the same time we admit, if necessary, that the idea of such a treaty has been conceived.

That of the two powers it will serve. What practical application can it have? It is evident that the United States, in order to break up the rebellion, must either go to war with the United Kingdom, or, if they do not, then to the assistance of their allies.

What is the result of such a course?

We thus see at a glance that there is nothing to indicate the existence of the treaty spoken of, or even that the states have dreamed of it; but though such a document were really signed, it could never be of any practical value.

The Marsh Angel Near Charles-

[From the London Telegraph, Sept. 5.]

"The Marsh Angel," as the rebels call the big gun of General Gillmore, has surely behaved like a mad bull in the ring to wake up all of our critics at home and abroad. He has not only won over all of them, but has also won over the American struggle throughout as if he had been a hand and a corner of his dozen politicians, a hand of a dozen neutrals.

At the same time we admit, if necessary, that the idea of such a treaty has been conceived.

That of the two powers it will serve. What practical application can it have? It is evident that the United States, in order to break up the rebellion, must either go to war with the United Kingdom, or, if they do not, then to the assistance of their allies.

What is the result of such a course?

We thus see at a glance that there is nothing to indicate the existence of the treaty spoken of, or even that the states have dreamed of it; but though such a document were really signed, it could never be of any practical value.

The Marsh Angel Near Charles-

[From the London Telegraph, Sept. 5.]

"The Marsh Angel," as the rebels call the big gun of General Gillmore, has surely behaved like a mad bull in the ring to wake up all of our critics at home and abroad. He has not only won over all of them, but has also won over the American struggle throughout as if he had been a hand and a corner of his dozen politicians, a hand of a dozen neutrals.

At the same time we admit, if necessary, that the idea of such a treaty has been conceived.

That of the two powers it will serve. What practical application can it have? It is evident that the United States, in order to break up the rebellion, must either go to war with the United Kingdom, or, if they do not, then to the assistance of their allies.

What is the result of such a course?

We thus see at a glance that there is nothing to indicate the existence of the treaty spoken of, or even that the states have dreamed of it; but though such a document were really signed, it could never be of any practical value.

The Marsh Angel Near Charles-

[From the London Telegraph, Sept. 5.]

"The Marsh Angel," as the rebels call the big gun of General Gillmore, has surely behaved like a mad bull in the ring to wake up all of our critics at home and abroad. He has not only won over all of them, but has also won over the American struggle throughout as if he had been a hand and a corner of his dozen politicians, a hand of a dozen neutrals.

At the same time we admit, if necessary, that the idea of such a treaty has been conceived.

That of the two powers it will serve. What practical application can it have? It is evident that the United States, in order to break up the rebellion, must either go to war with the United Kingdom, or, if they do not, then to the assistance of their allies.

What is the result of such a course?

We thus see at a glance that there is nothing to indicate the existence of the treaty spoken of, or even that the states have dreamed of it; but though such a document were really signed, it could never be of any practical value.

The Marsh Angel Near Charles-

[From the London Telegraph, Sept. 5.]

"The Marsh Angel," as the rebels call the big gun of General Gillmore, has surely behaved like a mad bull in the ring to wake up all of our critics at home and abroad. He has not only won over all of them, but has also won over the American struggle throughout as if he had been a hand and a corner of his dozen politicians, a hand of a dozen neutrals.

At the same time we admit, if necessary, that the idea of such a treaty has been conceived.

That of the two powers it will serve. What practical application can it have? It is evident that the United States, in order to break up the rebellion, must either go to war with the United Kingdom, or, if they do not, then to the assistance of their allies.

What is the result of such a course?

We thus see at a glance that there is nothing to indicate the existence of the treaty spoken of, or even that the states have dreamed of it; but though such a document were really signed, it could never be of any practical value.

The Marsh Angel Near Charles-

[From the London Telegraph, Sept. 5.]

"The Marsh Angel," as the rebels call the big gun of General Gillmore, has surely behaved like a mad bull in the ring to wake up all of our critics at home and abroad. He has not only won over all of them, but has also won over the American struggle throughout as if he had been a hand and a corner of his dozen politicians, a hand of a dozen neutrals.

At the same time we admit, if necessary, that the idea of such a treaty has been conceived.

That of the two powers it will serve. What practical application can it have? It is evident that the United States, in order to break up the rebellion, must either go to war with the United Kingdom, or, if they do not, then to the assistance of their allies.

What is the result of such a course?

We thus see at a glance that there is nothing to indicate the existence of the treaty spoken of, or even